

Need copyright information, application forms, or the latest Office regulation?

Get It Quick Over the Net

the exception of the application forms, the Office's most frequently requested material is also available via fax-on-demand. See below for examples of what's available and for pertinent addresses.

Most of the information that the Copyright Office makes available on paper is also available for viewing and downloading from the Copyright Office Website on the World Wide Web. In addition, Copyright Office catalog files from 1978 forward are online. Don't have a web browser? Don't despair. With

<http://www.loc.gov/copyright>

Want to search the Office's online files? Registration records and related documents cataloged from 1978 are at your fingertips. Our Website gives information about telnet access to these files.

Want to register a claim to copyright or renew a copyright? Click here to download forms.

Click here to access more than 40 informational circulars, from copyright basics to how to record a document.

Click here to access the Library of Congress homepage.

You can still write to us if you want. The address is Library of Congress, Copyright Office, 101 Independence Ave., S.E., Washington, D.C. 20559-6000.

If you don't have a web browser, but do have fax access, call us at (202) 707-2600 from any touchtone phone. Follow the directions to receive up to three items at one time.

Click here to link to other copyright-related resources on the Net.

Remember our addresses:

World Wide Web: <http://www.loc.gov/copyright>

telnet: locis.loc.gov This address is only good for accessing the Copyright Office online files.

Fax-on-demand: (202) 707-2600